Continuing Medical Education

COURSE DESCRIPTION

This is a 2.5-day biennial course organized by the Pulmonary Pathology Society focused on the state-of-the-art practice of Pulmonary and Thoracic pathology spanning neoplastic, non-neoplastic, and transplantation pathology. Lectures and discussions encompass updates and innovations in classification, staging, ancillary diagnostics, and molecular biomarkers with emphasis on new and rare entities. Sessions are grouped by topics and lecturers are chosen among nationally and internationally recognized experts in the field. The speakers will be assembled for panel question and answer time slots at the end of each session. In addition to lecture-based formats, sessions devoted to case-based presentations of mystery cases are included. These cases are solicited and selected before the meeting, with an opportunity for meeting participants review of diagnostic considerations. During session breaks, a poster session to encourage trainee participation will be hosted. As an in-person event, the speakers, participants, and attendees represent a unique assembly of those with an interest in Thoracic pathology and as such represent a pinnacle event for the field!

EDUCATIONAL OBJECTIVES

After participating in this activity, physicians should be able to:

- Integrate the current classification gaps with new data to anticipate the next classification
- Utilize guideline updates to incorporate new tests in their reflex and on-demand molecular testing algorithms
- Diagnose interstitial lung disease and recognize cases for triage that need tertiary consultation
- Analyze new data in the diagnosis of lung transplant related rejection and infection

TARGET AUDIENCE

Pathologists, pulmonologists, thoracic surgeons, thoracic radiologists, radiation oncologists, pathology assistants, and trainees.
